

COAL MINERS IN COLUMBIA GET $8 A DAY

Work Two or Three Days a Week, and Then Lay Off to Spend the Money.

COAL PLENTIFUL HERE
Operators Say Columbia Will Have Abundant Coal Supply If They Can Get It Mined.

2MINERS
The miners who work in the mines around Columbia ride to and from work. Some of the men who work steadily have their own cars, but most of them do not work enough to enjoy that luxury. The owners of the more distant mines provide trucks for hauling the workers from town to the mines in the morning and back to town again in the evening. The trains also help in the transportation of the workers.

Before the war miners in the local mines received 4 cents a bushel for mining from the solid. Now they are receiving from 8 to 10 cents for this work and 6 cents a bushel for mining after a mining machine. The miners say they can easily make from $6 to $8 a day. One day a worker struck an easy place to dig and made $14.

One of the workers said: "What's the use of working more than two days a week when I can make enough in that time to pay all my expenses. I have no one depending on me and I'm going to have a good time."

One man inherited $60 from his wife's estate. He did not work for three weeks afterward. Recently one miner worked five days and made more than $50. He spent the first of the next week on the streets of Columbia.

The operators of the local mines say they have enough coal to keep Columbia warm this winter without shipping in any if they can get it mined. The mines did not close down last spring as they have in the past. The Columbia Coal Company, which mined more than 100,000 bushels in 1917 and the same amount in 1918, fell to 75,000 bushels last year.

The houses in which those who stay at the mines live, are little more than shacks. There are no good houses for rent there. A house is a piece of property which cannot be carried from place to place and the workers are reluctant to build suitable ones. On this account most of the employees live in Columbia where the housing facilities are better.

The dangers in the mines here are almost negligible. It is seldom that anyone is hurt. Electricity, which plays an important part in the dangers of some mines, is not a source of danger here where the coal is hauled underground by mules. Mining machines are not used very much here, and when they are, great care is taken to see that they are properly operated.

New Boone County Directory to Be Most Extensive Ever Issued

Compiling a county directory, and doing the job thoroughly, is no easy task, according to Clinton Smith, who is in Columbia working on a directory for Boone County. The count in Columbia has been practically completed and Mr. Smith estimates that the population of the city will exceed 13,500. This is an excess of 2,500 over the count of the United States census canvass for the city. Mr. Smith accounts for this in two ways.

In the first place, the city canvassers are more thorough than those employed by the government. The government canvasser is paid by the number of names he turns in, and when he gets a number of back calls he is unwilling to waste the time to go back to pick them up when he can be earning more by going on in the territory he is working. On the other hand, the city canvasser is paid by the day and each house that is unable to reach is put on the back call list as before. Then these back calls are made up and a canvasser is given a list of sixty names, let us say. He may find forty of these, and he returns the other twenty to the back call list again. These are covered again the next day, and the next until they are all listed. Every street is picked and every house numbered. Then every house must be accounted for before the job is completed. Working by the day makes the canvasser just as willing to go back over a scattered territory as to get a long list of names in a thickly populated territory. Besides this the government canvasser is limited to a certain number of days, and towards the end of this time he is in a hurry and does not take time to go back to pick up the ones he has missed.

The second reason for the difference is that the government canvass covers the names just to the city limits. Some of the streets of the city extend beyond these limits, but the people there are not counted among the city population, but are placed on the rural list. Under the city canvassers all of these people are included in the city population, since they are city people. They do business in the city and many are business men of the city.

The new Boone County directory, which will be ready for distribution about January 1, is the largest and most extensive directory ever published here. Besides the usual content it has a fund of general information. The city and county officials are listed with their names and addresses. Schools are given with their location and names of principals and teachers. A list of churches, with their pastor's name and address, the officers of the Sunday school, and a list of the societies within the church, is included. All lodges, secret societies, labor organizations, clubs and societies are listed with the date and place of meetings. The names and locations of the University fraternities are to be included. Locations and intersections of streets are to be fully explained.

The rural section gives the R. F. D. address of everyone listed and indicates whether or not he is the owner of his land or a tenant.

Thornton, Norris Gibson, Jessie Richardson, Mark Turner, Velpe Roberts and George Morgan, Miss Ethel Burnett and Granville Acton have joined but have not been baptised. The church also organized a B. Y. P. U. society Sunday night. The Rev. H. P. Chevens is the pastor of the church. Others have joined by letter. The revival is said to be the most successful held in McBaine for a long time.

Miss Mary Walsh has left for a week's visit at her home in Cameron, Mo. Leonard Nelson, of Moberly, was a week-end guest at the Dana Press Club. Miss Winifred Harley of Stephens College was the week-end guest of Miss Mary Phlegar at Read Hall.

F. L. Wright of the College of Agriculture, will go to Springfield tonight to help the county agent plan the work of the boys' and girls' clubs for the year. He will also go to Lawrence to attend a pig, calf and poultry roundup.

PEOPLE MORE REACTIONARY

A. W. Taylor Says Conservatism of Church Conventions Is Due to War.

"The general trend of the Convention of the Disciples of Christ just held in St. Louis was, like the conventions of all the denominations this year, reactionary," said Prof. A. W. Taylor, who attended the convention. All the conventions were conservative this year, due probably to the war. The people were all keyed up during the war and now the pendulum is swinging the other way.

The main part of the time was taken up with argument concerning joining the union movement in China. The convention voted it down as other denominations have done.

The Missouri movement to raise $2,000,000 for the six state colleges supported by the Disciples of Christ was revived. When only $800,000 had been raised, the movement was suspended on account of the Interchurch World Movement.

A resolution was passed asking the Sunday School Association, to join if possible, the other associations in completing the surveys of the Interchurch World Movement.

"The general attitude of the younger men at the convention was progressive," Professor Taylor said. "There were other encouraging aspects of the meeting. The total amount subscribed for missions and benevolent work was $3,000,000, or about a half million more than last year. The total subscribed through the Interchurch World Movement to missions and educational work was $5,000,000."
